Conducted by Mrs. Charity Brush THE CHILD'S INDIVIDUALITY.

HIS is a real Mothers' Club, for the benefit of mothers everywhere who are struggling with questions of discipline, training, education, clothing, for the children. Write to Aunt Chatty of problems which are vexipg you, and she will advise and help you to a solu. " of Write to her, too, of your own discoveries, of methods you have found successful in smoothing the rough paths of life for the tender, childish feet, that through the Mothers' Club your experience may be of benefit to other mothers who are still tangled in the web of perplexity you have so happily unraveled.

Co-operation is the secret of success in any business; so why not in the business of motherhood, that highest and holiest calling which always has been and always will be woman's crown of glory, no matter what other avenues of usefulness may be opened to her? Address Mrs. Charity Brush, care of this paper.

watch. I have sent mine to the jeweler's to be repaired and I need one."

"Oh, but Uncle Harry," son protested, "I need mine. I am the only fellow that has a watch in our crowd and I promised to keep time for the sham battle this afternoon. We've got two forts—"That's only play," his uncle interrupted impatiently. "We're going out to the speedway and I want a timepiece:"

"If I had lost my watch and wanted to borrow yours for a game, would you let me have it. Uncle Harry?" son asked, as he drew away from his uncle's hand.

"Well, I guess not!" the uncle hooted. "Let you have my gold watch? I should smille!"

"Well, I like my watch, too. I needn't let him have it, need I, mother?" son appealed to his mother who had refrained from taking part in the controversy, but who looked most uncomfortable because of it. She was the same mother who had releier daughter in a cherished pink hair ribbon and white fur collar belonging to the younger daughter to wear to a children's party the younger girl was of my earlier talks. She spoke of it at one of our club meetings where she had been listening to the discussion of the rights of children to their belongings. She said she had been so much impressed by the younger child's refusal ever again to "LODOCCOPE"

At the risk of repeating some things I have said to you before, dear mothers, I want to talk to you today about what I call the sin of failing, to respect your child's individuality. It is a subject upon which I have strong feeling because in my own childhood I was a sufferer from that very cause. Many of us were, no doubt. In those days, the attention of parents was not called to the rights of the child to the extent it is today; children were not supposed to have any rights, in fact, if there was any conflict between themselves and their elders. All the rights belonged to the grown-ups. But I was an unusually sensitive child and I felt many things keenly without having enough conception of what was wrong to be able to put my protest individually has been ignored and trampled upon that more than once I have felt impelled to make my protest now, in the name of my own childhood as well as the childhood of these modern times.

Almost every day I see some instance that gives me a text for this most often repeated talk to our Mothers? Club. Only a few days ago I was spending a day in a family where there are there interesting children, interesting because of their bright minds and the strongly marked individuality of each one of the three. To the oldest child, a boy now il years old, some one gave at Christmas a real watch, a watch that keeps good time. The day I was there the bachelor uncle, who makes his home in the family, came into the dining-room juut after we were all seated for the mid-day dinner. He stopped beride the chair in which his nephew had been placed and, reaching down, tried to take the watch from the boy's pocket.

"Here, son, with a deprecating glance there since in dealing with her children to realize that their things were their own just as much as heep light to lead it was the replied, gently:

"To the didn't ask me," the little fellow still protested. "He just tried to take it to want to, but don't you think it would be suffered to take it to you do not like." the just he protested the polit

Carrots cooked with stock are delicious. First cook them, scraped, until they are almost tender. Then silce them or dice them and put them over the fire with a cupful of stock and salt and pepper. Simmer gently for ten or fifteen minutes and serve very hot. If the stock is not available, use a cupful of milk and water, a little butter, a teaspoonful of sugar and plenty of salt and pepper.

Peas in carrot cases are good. To prepare these, boil scraped carrots until tender, choosing large ones. Then cut each in half crosswise and make two cups—slice off the end so that they will stand straight—and they will stand th
